Message from the Principal of B.H.K.Mahavidyalaya

Newsletter is not only the testimony of presentation of the actual ambience of activities of the department concerned, where the department works as a cohesive unit, but also the measuring rod for evaluating the activities done during the publication period. Nowadays, every department has to follow the parameters of input, process and output following the NEP 2020. Every department has to explicate what they have done, how they have performed the activities and what have been the achieved goals. Newsletter of a department, in this sense, exhibit all the three parameters. Prajwal am, the newsletter of the Department of Education, Bamanpukur Humayun Kabir Mahavidyalaya, is definitely a noteworthy publication which maintains its continuity and also presents the outcome of the department in every areas of activity. The editor of the current issue, Prof Sumita Chatterjee has meticulously described and presented the performed events chronologically and has maintained the mission, vision, goal and objectives of the Department of Education as well as Prajwalam, the Newsletter of the Department, along with the College as a whole. The issue may be an ocular presentation for others who have not yet thought of such endeavor, and for this reason, the editor of Prajwalam deserves special thanks. I, on this auspicious occasion of publication, convey my thanks to all the stakeholders of the Department of Education, BHK Mahavidyalaya, and aspires for continuous upgradation of the newsletter so that it can reach its peak to enlighten the academic fraternity.

From the desk of the Editor

In today's rapidly evolving society, education is no longer confined to the early years of our lives. It has become a lifelong pursuit, a tool that empowers individuals to adapt, grow, and thrive in an unpredictable world. As technology continues to reshape industries, and new knowledge becomes available at lightning speed, the importance of fostering a culture of continuous learning cannot be overstated. The traditional model of education – one that follows a linear path from elementary school to university – is being challenged. Instead, we are witnessing the rise of flexible, personalized learning opportunities. Online courses, certifications, vocational training, and adult education programs are just a few of the many avenues available to learners of all ages. This shift is crucial, not only for individuals seeking personal fulfillment but also for entire communities aiming to stay competitive in the global marketplace. The goal of education is no longer just to impart knowledge but to instill curiosity and resilience. In a world where the shelf life of skills is shrinking, adaptability is key. Our students need to be equipped with the tools to learn how to learn, so they can navigate the ever-changing landscape of modern careers. More importantly, education should foster critical thinking, creativity, and empathy, qualities that technology cannot replace. As we look ahead, it is clear that the future of education will be shaped by collaboration between schools, employers, and the broader community. Partnerships that offer real-world learning experiences, mentorship, and support networks will be instrumental in preparing students for life beyond the classroom. In this spirit of collaboration, let us all commit to becoming lifelong learners. Whether through formal education or self-directed study, we each have the power to continue growing and contributing meaningfully to society. After all, education is not just preparation for life – it is life itself. Let's invest in learning, not only for today's students but for all of us. The role of education in today's world is more important than ever. By embracing lifelong learning and adapting our systems to meet the demands of the future, we can ensure that individuals, communities, and societies continue to flourish.

Sumita Chatterjee, Assistant Prof and HOD Department of Education., BKM Mahavidyalaya
